

Recognizing Danger

Adults Asking for Help

It is important to know that adults don't need help from children they don't know. But how do you recognize what people need help and which ones don't? Here are some examples:

"I'm lost, can you come here and tell where the closest gas station is?"

Adults know that they need to ask an adult these kind of questions.

"Have you seen a puppy!? She is very small and fluffy, please help!"

Although this person never asked you to help look for the puppy with them you should always go to your parent first and see what they think is best.

- If an adult asks you for something that you don't feel comfortable doing, and they get mad or upset seek a parent right away.
- Kidnappers will come up with new ways to trick you so always be careful.

Other Examples:

"I'm here to drop off an important package you can take it for your parents."

"I need help can I please use your phone?!"

"It's the police, we need to speak with you open the door."

Never open the door without a parent with you no matter what. All adults and law enforcement will understand.

If you ever feel uncomfortable or in serious cases threatened have a "secret code phrase"

You're at a friends house and someone there makes you feel uncomfortable or has done something to you. Make a pact that you will call home. But they are in the same room,

"Mom can we get ice cream later?"

This will be indication something is not right and she needs to come and get you right away.
